Alien dinner

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/24203890.

Rating:	Not Rated
Archive Warning:	No Archive Warnings Apply
Category:	F/M
Fandoms:	Tokyo Ghoul, Guardians of the Galaxy (Movies)
Relationships:	Gamora/Peter Quill, Peter Quill & Yondu Udonta, Groot & Peter Quill, Groot & Rocket Raccoon, Peter Quill & Rocket Raccoon, Drax the Destroyer & Gamora & Groot & Peter Quill & Rocket Raccoon
Characters:	Peter Quill, Gamora (Marvel), Yondu Udonta, Groot, Rocket Raccoon, Nebula (Marvel), Drax the Destroyer, Collector, Carina (Marvel), Meredith Quill, Bereet (Marvel), Irani Rael, Kraglin Obfonteri, The Broker (Guardians of the Galaxy), Corpsmen Dey, Ronan the Accuser, Required Stan Lee cameo
Additional Tags:	No tokyo Ghoul Charactors, Ghoul!Quill, Cannibalism, Outer Space, Ghouls, Space Flight, raccoon, cool stuff, I promise, space travel, rare species, Alien Death, BAMF Peter Quill, Infinity Gems, Peter Quill can hold the stone, it only makes sense, He's a demigod, and a ghoul, Abduction, Action/Adventure, Alcohol, Alternate Canon, Alternate Universe, Angst, Badass, Biting, Blood, Confessions, Crimes & Criminals, Drama, Drugs, Family, Family Feels, Friendship, Hurt/Comfort, Injury, Mythical Beings & Creatures, Sad, Science Fiction, Science Fiction & Fantasy, Supernatural Elements
Language:	English
Stats:	Published: 2020-05-15 Updated: 2023-06-06 Words: 7,518 Chapters: 10/?

Alien dinner

by Grays_Lament

Summary

Peter was born on earth, a small Terran boy who only got to spend 8 of his years learning the ways of his ancestors. In those years he learned two things. One, he wasn't human he was a ghoul. Two, cassette players are awesome, also outlaws are badass (but that's beside the point).

When he was abducted by an actual intergalactic space ship ran by outlaws he learned another two things. One, When aliens threaten to eat you they're not being serious and you shouldn't eat them in retaliation. Two, being a ravager, outlaw, half-ghoul that travels space in search of treasure, women, and the finest of alien meats is considerably better than any outlaw he could imagine on earth.

-
Or, Peter Quill is a half-ghoul half-god in space. Hijinx and angst happen.

Notes

Do you get the title, It's a pun! Cause alien can mean different, and his dinners are defiantly different AND he eats dinners in space making it alien AND AND he eats aliens for dinner making it an alien dinner!! GENIUS, I KNOW (I do not actually think this is clever, I'm truly ashamed of my self for this) YOU SHOULD BE IMPRESS BY LINGUAL TRICKERY!

-DISCLAIMER-

I haven't watched Tokyo ghoul in a while, I've had the idea rattling around for a while, and when I found luki's version I just had to try it myself. None of the Tokyo Ghoul characters are in it, cause they probably won't ever go to earth.

Also, Quill has the Ukaku type kagune, cause that's my favorite, and because of the that Quill is going to be thinner and stuff (like how the wiki describes Ukaku type user should be) Peter is probably going to be younger looking (like 24 or something)

Thanks for reading the disclaimer :)

- Inspired by [Restricted Work] by Luki (KelpieCodyne)

Chapter 1

Peter was born on earth, a small Terran boy who only got to spend 8 of his years learning the ways of his ancestors. In those years he learned two things. One, he wasn't human he was a ghoul. Two, cassette players are awesome, also outlaws are badass (but that's beside the point).

When he was abducted by an actual intergalactic space ship ran by outlaws he learned another two things. One, When aliens threaten to eat you they're not being serious and you shouldn't eat them in retaliation. Two, being a ravager, outlaw, half-ghoul that travels space in search of treasure, women, and the finest of alien meats is considerably more badass than any outlaw he could imagine on earth.

Being a ghoul in space may sound difficult. Trust me, it's not as hard as it sounds. Most Aliens taste just as good as human, some even better (others much much worse), it's also very unlikely that the intergalactic police is going to start searching for one missing star traveler. So it's easier... most of the time. Sometimes, for instance right now, when you're on a one-week long galavant through one of the more abandoned parts of the galaxy and realize halfway through you didn't bring near enough food. At that point, you have a choice, turn around and wait for the ravager family that you may have betrayed and stolen coordinates from to catch-up and lock you in the brig for a week or two or keep going forwards. Third choice, eat Bereet, that beautiful alien woman that had stowed along looking for a safe ride away from her home planet and for the company of one Peter 'Star-lord' Quill yesterday. And while the third choice became more and more tempting by the hour (Bereet was just too nice to eat) he stuck with option Two: Starve himself for three days as he neared the orb.

It was quite the time really. He was very proud of himself for that one, and by 'that one' he means 'being able to withstand starvation for that long as she just sat there eating away at the jerking she had brought, rubbing the ability to eat anything in his face like it was her daughters A+' but tomato, tomato.

But he had made it, he was seconds away from the largest bounty he had scene in a while.

Chapter 2

"Peter!" Yondu yelled from somewhere below deck, probably in the boarding port of the ravager ship. Peter scurried down to him, it didn't take long to find him. Peter had spent the last four years learning every crevice of this ship, he had even found a small bay, more like an empty space probably used to hide contraband that Yondu hadn't noticed when he stole the ship all those years ago. Peter decked out his little space, calling it his 'hideout' (he thought it sounded cool). It was accessed through the floor of the pantry in the kitchen. The floor opens to a little space only about 2ft by 2ft, but that's just a decoy. Hidden under the floor of that space was a ladder that leads to the hideout. All of that means one thing, it's a miracle that Peter had gotten a couch, three blasters, and various other objects Yondu has been looking for for months down there without anyone noticing. It's practically impossible but hey, Peter was King of the impossible. That whole impossibility thing was the whole reason Yondu had called him down.

"What's up, Yondu," Peter said, trotting in front of him, a smaller ship behind Yondu being filled up with fuel. It was the ship Yondu regularly used on missions that required more stealth or just random adventures that required fewer men. Peter was really hoping it was the former, he had only been on little trips. Catch some guy, steal more fuel, get groceries. It's not fun, but Peter was 12 now! He could handle a big mission, Yondu said it himself 'you're skinny, good for thieving'. But maybe Yondu was lying since he had yet to take him on a mission that requires any thieving, only point and shoots.

"My boy, I need a bit of a hand on the next one," He said, placing a hand on his shoulder, Kraglin watching the whole thing, "There's a vault, one with walls that none of my boys can crack. You thinking' you can bust it down?" Yondu was asking, but he was already loading Peter into the ship and tossing some spare supplies in. Everyone in the crew had a healthy respect for a hungry Quill, ever since that incident with 'Peter's special freezer' being unplugged, and they choose to avoid that to the best of their ability. So more supplied where added.

"I can crack It, let's go-" Peter looked back at Yondu, quirking an eyebrow and crossing his arms in that odd manner only a kid could do, "You said I can't use my powers,"

"This is an exception, kid," Yondu said, patting him on the head as they boarded the ship, "Only use them in emergencies, or if I tell ya you can. If word gets out I think it might be a bit more difficult for us to get around," Peter nodded than ran up to the co-pilot's seat. With a glance from Kraglin, he trotted out of the seat and into one of the back rooms that had the best views of the stars.

Time for his first mission

After the first one, each mission came more often. Most of them were actually utilizing his natural thieving skill, a few had required a hand from his kagune. At the age of 15 Yondu had given him a bit more leash. Letting him choose which missions he partook in, even starting a few of his own (with the addition of a few trusted crew members). One of those missions led to him acquiring a ship he named the Milano that he stole from a very uptight criminal. Peter loved that ship like a baby, forgoing his usual time spent in the hideout for his ship. When he was 20 his ship was one of the best ships in the reachable galaxy if he did say so himself. It even had a second 'special cooler' filled with various alien meats. All of them perfectly organized by color in terms of taste. Naming the packets 'Kree bicep' might have been off-putting to any toll booth inspector to happen by. He was actually quite proud of his spectrum of meats, he was like a ghoul chef. It was almost impossible to find an alien he hadn't yet sampled, but there was still more galaxy he hadn't seen and he was excited to see the rest of it. So he kept thieving

---

At 25 and 2/5 he had run into a bit of a snag. That snag being some idiot not telling the crew Yondu had set up that the fricken building was being monitored by the Nova Corps! What were the million units in weaponry worth if a third of the ravager team got caught doing it. That was what Peter was thinking as the platoon of Nova corps approached. He was running out of options. He and his comrades had been forced to drop their weapons. Handcuffs were approaching quickly. A life behind bars, starving to death, was approaching quickly. This was an emergency. There was only one thing he could do.

His eyes turned back, all the ravagers around him pailing at the site and leaning away. They had all seen portions of the carnage he could do and they weren't too keen on getting in the away.

Within a minute 30 Nova corps officers where dead. On the good side, Peter got to figure out what a new alien species tasted like. For the record, Xandarians tasted slightly sweet.

On the bad side, a bounty of about 100k units was now on Peter's head along with a picture of his appearance being sent out across the whole entire Andromeda Galaxy.

After another five years, his taste for treasure and blood had become well-known throughout both most intergalactic police force and the underbelly of the space. His name was whispered in fear or awe. Officers were trained on how to detain him and cells where made in some of the larger prisons just in case after his first escape. After that, another 100k was added to the bounty and it kept growing. Yondu gave him a clap on the back each time units where added, telling him someday he might reach the million Units Yondu has if he got lucky. Peter would laugh and say someday he'd double it.

Vol. 3

The holographic map he'd nabbed wasn't quite as reliable as Yondu had made it out to be, but it did his job. It leed him straight to the chamber, which made it pretty unbelievable that someone hadn't bothered going after it sooner, but hey, Peter wasn't one to look a gift horse in the mouth. He set down the magnet thing (Peter didn't get much of this space tech, but most others don't either). He snatched it from the ground, spinning the ball in his hand and toss it around. It wasn't that strange for something so small could be worth so much in space, he'd heard of some batteries that were worth a crazy amount but you had to be even crazier to try and steal them. It was always nice to have a small target, stealing crates full of weapons was a lot harder than say... a rare diamond made from the remnants of a black hole. The diamond didn't get them near as much money as the weapon though, so he guessed it had evened out in the end.

And then guns were pointed at him.

"Drop the orb," Said the partially robotic man (another common thing in space) as they shoved the guns closer, "What is your name!" He said even louder. The gun poked him in the chest, the goons getting closer. Peter flew his hands into the air, best to avoid a fight when he was this starved. The guns would do some damage before he got close enough and he wouldn't be able to regenerate fast enough.

"Drop the orb!!"

"Okay man, chill, chill," Peter said back, dropping to it the ground, it rolling to a halt a few feet away. He'd be able to get to it, he just needed to wait for the right moment.

"What is your name! How did you know about this," He had picked up the orb and was shaking it at him. Bad side, the orb would be harder to get to now, good side, one less gun pointing at him. Th- wait... he didn't know who he was. Almost, not almost actually, every officer and bounty hunter knew who he was on site. This guy must be some kind of private guard or just some kind of idiot. But, hey, that was another good thing. This guy would have no idea how to contain Peter if he did manage to take him down, and the element of surprise wasn't too bad either. But he wouldn't need his ghoul powers for this, he didn't need them for much in the end. Speed up healing and having an ace up you're sleeve was nice but he tried to avoid using them in the end and it was more fun to relay on his wits. Really it was annoying to be a ghoul in space, his starvation at the moment would attest to that.

So he fought his way out in a dance of wits, laser guns, and rocket boots. He had even managed to throughout his outlaw name, he had gotten sick of Cannibal Quill and was pushing for Star-Lord now. It was catching on, just you wait. Just... you... wait.

Vol. 4

Peter was getting hungry. Before he was hungry, but know It was at a different level. Once his adrenaline from the fight had left him and he had apologized to Bereet, the hot runaway that he has firmly decided not to eat, the hunger had evolved to the more calculated kind. He'd felt it before, that time he had been in a prison for a bit more than a week. It was what he felt when he was shifting from fun-loving Peter 'Star-Lord' Quill to The Cannibal. The animalistic side of him that only came out during extreme panic or extreme hunger. He probably had a day before he went off the deep end. There was a planet nearby, just before the buyer's planet showed. It was more like a gas station than a planet, it was verily moon-sized and too small for a civilization to start on. It was too small for any government system and too small for any crime lord to take residence in, which meant to things. It was a perfect place for a runaway to look for a new ride and for a hungry person to find some grub. It would take about 5 hours to get there, 3 if he risked a few monitored zones (his trust in the Malono allowed him to get through without getting caught so he went with the fast route).

"Peter, you have call," Bereet said clicking the button to answer.

"No Wait don't-," He wanted to be mad, he really did, but he just couldn't. She was too dang adorable sitting there in his old shirt with her apologetic smile. Maybe he was getting soft "Quill," Yondu's angry voice called from the screen behind him.

"Hey, Yondu," Peter said, turning around slowly.

"I'm here on Morage," He was angry, "Ain't no Orb, Ain't no you,"

"Well, I was in the neighborhood," Such a lie, that planet was even near a neighborhood, "I thought I'd save you the hassle,"

"Well, Where you at now, boy" Yondu was looking him over suspiciously, that man had too good of an eye, he must have noticed something.

"I feel really bad about this," He did, "But I'm not going to tell you," Not that bad really.

"I slaved over this deal, boy-"

"Really making a few calls-"

"And now you're going to rip me off," He was really angry now, "We do not do that to each other, we're ravages. We got a code." Bereet looked really uncomfortable with being a part of this conversation however indirectly.

"And that code is 'steal from everybody'," Peter responded. There where other codes, but that was the main one.

"When I picked you up on Terra, boy, these boys wanted to eat you. I stopped em', I even feed you-" Yondu paused, finally figuring out what it was he had noticed, "You ate, boy? You left in a hurry, didn't grab your lunch box?"

"I'm fine," Peter responded, tight-lipped.

"We ain't going to clean another of your incidents up again, Quill," Yondu muttered, "Bring back the orb and we'll have a nice family mea-" Peter hung up.

"Sorry about that," He said, turning to Bereet.

Vol. 5

"He'll be chasing us now," Quill said to Bereet, "We're only a couple hours from your drop off, so you'll be fine. If you happen to see that blue bastard don't tell him you saw me. Don't tell anyone you've seen me,"

"If you do that for me as well," Bereet responded, Peter nodded and she smiled.

With Bereet on the gas station planet and Peter's stomach (and freezer) full he made the final trek to Xandar. A large, extremely well-patroled planet that held the Capital of the Nova Empire. It would be difficult for Peter to get around, which is probably why Yondu didn't think Peter would steal it himself, but Peter had gotten good at avoiding the Police. He just avoided the facial recognition cameras and the Nova Corpsmen were always so godly dressed that he could pick them out of a crowds and avoid them without a problem. For the few that had noticed him about, have of them stared at him with a com in their hand. Usually, Peter would just stare back and they'd run off, other times Peter had to run. His reputation was both a help and a hindrance.

Now, however, after a few narrow avoidances he was just a few steps from the Brooker.

"Mr.Quill," Said the Xandarian, he certainly seemed happy to see him.

"Brooker, the orb," Peter said it on the white counter, "As commissioned,"

"Where's Yondu," He seemed nervous now, "He said he would be delivering. You might attract too much attention," That's why he was nervous.

"He wanted to be here, sends his love. Wanted me to tell you 'you have the best eyebrows in the business," Peter laughed out.

"Well, I hope you don't like them too much,"

"Ha, cannibal joke. I'll have you know Xandarian is a bit too sweet for me," He rolled the orb over to Brooker, "Now to Business,"

"Yes, quite," This dude was not scared of him, that almost scared Peter. Some of the Ravagers he had grown up with were scared of Peter, but they had seen him in action where Brooker had not.

"What is it," Peter asked as he stared at the orb.

"It's my policy to not discuss business with my clients,"

"I nearly died gettin' it for ya'" Peter muttered, really he wasn't in too much danger he just wanted to add a few units to the deal.

"An occupational hazard, I presume, from someone of your appetites," Brooker responded.

"Some machine headed freak, working for a dude named Ronan-" He cut Peter off.

"Ronan! I'm sorry Mr.Quill," The Brooker scurried around the desk and shoved the orb into his hand, "I truly am, but I want no part of this transaction if Ronan is involved,"

"Woah! Woah Woah Woah," He got him to stop pushing on him, "Who's Ronan,"

"A Kree fanatic, who won't stop till Xandarian culture, my Culture! Is gone," He continued pushing him out, he wasn't too stone, but the shock of it got him to continue stepping back, "He's someone who's bad side I'd rather not be on,"

"What about my bad side!" Quill countered.

"You may be a dangerous man Quill, but you just that. A man. Ronan controls an army," The door opened behind him and he stepped out, "Farewell, Mr.Quill,"

"We had a deal bro!" Peter yelled as the door slide shut. He wanted to take it down, but there would be no chance in him getting his unit then. That Brooker was incredibly lucky that Peter was on a full stomach or he would have been toast. Then he noticed the hot green girl. She was standing there watching the whole thing. She didn't seem to recognize him, that meant he had a chance if he calmed down immediately.

"What happened?" She asked, stepping a few paces closer.

"This guy just back out on a deal," Calm, Peter was so calm right now, couldn't be farther from angry, "If it's one thing I hate, it's a man without integration. Peter Quill, people call me 'Star-Lord,"

"You have the bearing of a man of honor," Dang, he was not expecting this.

"Well, I wouldn't say that people say that about me," They do not, "All the time..." He was rambling, then she kicked him in the chest and snagged the orb. Dang she was strong.

Peter through a lasso laser at her, tripping her as she ran. He jumped to grab the orb, bad idea. She kicked him onto the ground and she preceded to punch him in the face many times. He blocked and she just kicked him. Dang she was flexible.

With one final move she was on top of him with her danger poised to go down on his throat. He felt that animalistic side rising, his eyes darkening, as he was facing life or death.

"This was not the plan," Than a raccoon tackled her. He does not know who was luckier in this situation.

"Put him in the bag," The raccoon called to the tree beast. MERCENARIES! These guys must be idiots, he had never meat a mercenary dumb enough to go after him.

Peter snatched up the orb from the ground and ran the other way. Thank the lord from that Raccon- a knife hit his hand an the orb rolled away and off the platform.

The orb switched hands a few more times until finally he had it as the green girl was rocketed away and then a bag was over Quill and he was tossed over the tree's shoulder. And then the bag was dropped, and then he electrocuted the girl. And then he himself was electrocuted. How many volts was that! Was the only thing Peter thought as he dropped to the ground

Vol. 6

A few corpsmen trotted up to Peter. Ones he recognized. Not this guy. You let one police officer live because he bought you a drink a now you have to deal with police officers that aren't as scared of him as he wants them to be

"Hey. It's Quill the Cannibal, I heard you got a new code name," He waved some other Corpsmen over, telling them to snag him with the gravity ray too, "Star Prince was it?" Dey asked as he was pulled up from the ground, still groggy from the electricity.

"Star-Lord," He murmured, "Come on man, it's an outlaw name," He was hovering in the air now. Those freaking gravity beam, who even invested these dang things, they were way too cow abductions.

"Relax pal. It's cool to have a code name," His voice patterned off as he got farther away and closer to the raccoon. He heard Dey's partner talking,

"You know Quill," He seemed kinda scared.

"He's really not the bad of a guy," Dey said, his reputation was flying out the window

"But, he eats people," At least he knows that he's dangerous. There's no point in being a space outlaw if no one is scared of him. They were too far away from him to hear anymore. He was right next to the raccoon now.

"So, want to team up?" Quill murmured as he looked at the ships surrounding them.

They had them in a line-up. Carted off to some analyzing station as Dey looked them over one by one.

Gamora was first, Brooker turned out to be right. Ronan was someone you should mess with Gamora on his side.

The Raccoon, 89p13 or Rocket, turned out to be a super-intelligent Raccoon and the tree, Groot, is his partner.

"Peter Jason Quill, also known as 'Cannibal Quill'," Dey said, "A Terran raised from youth by a Ravanger group lead by Yondu Udanta. He's escaped from 2 prisons and has 30 counts of confirmed murders. He has extreme strength and speed, rapid healing, and some sort of internal weapon,"

"How do we contain him," Asked another guard. Peter stopped his flipping off of the Gaurd for a second to listen closer.

"We have a type of tranquilizer that seemed to work on his blood cells. We are going to inject him in a moment," said another guard.

"Now wait just a moment-" Peter was cut off as the conveyer belt he was standing on moved and he was pulled out of the room and into a holding cell with the others.

"So you really are Quill the Cannibal," Rocket said, poking his leg.

"Ow, stop! What kind of mercenary are you?"Peter yanked his leg away as the Raccoon sniffed him and proceeded to study him, "I've never met a single person dumb enough to go after me with less than 10 people behind them,"

"We almost had you," Rocket said.

"I would have got away," Peter stepped around the room. It seemed like a perfect cube the second all the doors where closed. No deviation at all. No way out.

"Sure you would have," Rocket said just as a sharp pain hit Peter in the side of the neck out of nowhere. He pulled a dart out. How had he forgot the syrume they were talking about. He felt his himself almost instantly go week as the ghoulish powers left him. How the heck did they figure it out?!

"What was that," Rocket said, as Peter slid down the wall and leaned back. He was felling real dizzy.

"I guess they were pretty worried about me breaking out again, they must have figured out what could stop my... less human side," He wasn't even lying, he was too out of it to, he could verily smell Gamora's blood in the air. He wasn't even hungry for it. He would have felt human if it wasn't for the complete lack of strength, verily even enough to move.

"Do you really eat people," Gamoras asked, from the other corner of the cube.

"Yes," Peter said, his head lolling back and tapping against the metal as he looked at her. Rocket backed away, he must have that that was just an intimidation technique.

"Why?" She questioned.

"My body can't process animals and plants," He glanced to Rocket and Groot, his eyebrow queried. Could he eat them? He had been thinking about since the second he saw them in the back of his mind, which probably said a lot about him. But in his dazed state, he was willing to state it, "It might have something to do with whether or not the being is sentient though. Now that I think about it. You don't have to worry though, I ate earlier today," That probably freaked them out more.

Vol. 7

Chapter Notes

> This fic has been exploding (If exploding means three Kuddos every other day, haha) so I felt like I had to update!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Peter spent the whole trip to the prison dead asleep. So it was a bit of a shock when multiple sets of hands hauled him up. Grabbing him roughly by the clothes and forcing him to his feet. Before he had a second to protest, still feeling dazed and a bit sick, something was strapped over his mouth. Hands fumbling behind his head as whatever it was tightened, pushing at the bridge of his nose and his cheeks painfully. It took an embarrassingly long time to realize it was a muzzle. Wasn't the drug enough? He tried to get angry and failed, he could barely keep his eyes open. So he settled with a mumbled, "I'm not a freaking dog,".

It didn't land, most aliens don't know what dogs are.

Without a word they shoved him into line with the rest of the motley crew. All of them watched him stumble with slight amusement before they were ordered to start walking forward. The guards were ruff and efficient, not scared to kick a prison or point a gun at them. Peter had a feeling they weren't bluffing when they threatened even worse violence. Once everyone was in line the guards filed them down the halls.

They were being led through the entrance ward of the Kyln when Rocket started bragging.

"I guess most of Nova Core wansta uphold the laws, but this place is corrupt and cruel," Rocket looked up at Quill, "I bet they won't even take that muzzle off ya,"

"What?!" Peter said, a bit of fear seeping through his drug-addled mind. Him getting hungry wouldn't be good for anyone, drugs and muzzle or not. The second whatever they had injected him with started fading from his system everyone would be in for a hell of a time, Peter included.

“They probably want to watch ya starve after what you did to that troop of Novas a few years ago,” Rocket said, with a laugh. Peter didn’t have an adequate reply in time, “But don’t worry, you’ll be back to munchin' on person chow real soon. I’ve broken out of 22 prisons, this one’s no different,” Peter never thought he’d see a raccoon swagger.

Peter let just a little bit of hope seep in. Rocket seemed like the type to brag and to over-exaggerate, but he didn’t seem like he lied often. So, Peter believed him and started to calm down even more than whatever that drug was forcing him to.

That was until he caught a glimpse of some secretary or guard or- whatever the heck he was using. His. Walkman.

How dare he go through his stuff, how dare he listen to his tapes. His mother’s tape.

A sort of cold churn in his gut was the only true anger to make it past the barricade, but it was enough to get him to lunge into the room. He felt slow and clumsy and it really made Peter understand everything that serum had done to him. It made him understand that he had no chance in a real bout. None whatsoever. This wasn’t going to be anything like his previous stays in prison. This one was gonna be bad.

Through all these revelations he was letting his mouth do all the talking, not his brain.

He was, of course, tased.

The rest of the intake of the prison was annoying and way past ‘borderline cruel’. It was straight-up vindictive, and trust him, Peter has had a lot of scorned lovers. He knows what vindictiveness feels like. And, judging by Rocket, the guards seemed to feel this hate for not only Peter, but everyone in the whole prison.

Peter was starting to feel… worried for Gamora. What could be happening to her, yeah people really hate what Peter has done but, compared to their hate for Gamora, Peter was a nippy puppy.

Peter managed to tell himself that Gamora could take care of herself, 100% true, and tried to think of how he'd take care of himself instead.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please Kuddo and comment!

Vol. 8

Chapter Notes

> Wow, I just reread the fic and dang was I bad at writing! The story and comedy was there but it lacked everything else, haha. I'm thinking about forgoing the next update and just redoing the first few chapters, what does everyone thing of that?

See the end of the chapter for more notes

His fear for Gamora's safety grew as they made it into the cafeteria. People throwing food and screaming at her, looking over Peter completely. Gamora took the abuse without so much as a flinch, walking as if nothing was happening at all, saying vaguely eerie things about what 'the future holds'. It didn't dissuade the growing uncertainty Peter was feeling.

He turned back to look where he was walking. Trying to shake himself out of the haze, of both emotion and drugs, and was met with a huge alien staring him down. Peter had met this type of alien before. Strong, tough, bitter. Hard to take down, harder to eat. The guy chuckled (He wouldn't be chuckling if he knew that Peter was thinking of ways to tenderize him), running a hand down Peter's face and catching a finger on the strap of the muzzle.

He pulled it.

Peter tried to flinch, grab the hand, say something. React. All he managed to do was stumble and nearly fall, the world swirling as he lost his sense of up and down.

"Looks like the cannibals been tamed-" Before he could finish his sentence, and before Peter finally lost his failing footing, a line of tree branches reached past him. Both stabilizing Peter and digging into the alien's nose. Pulling the man off the ground and into the air, him screaming the whole time.

Rocket sauntered in front the display. Arrogant and without even a modicum of doubt, started proclaiming to the prison who exactly was in charge. Ending it with the alien falling to the ground, blood flowing out of his nose and crying. They stepped by him once they were finished, continuing to their cell like nothing had happened.

Peter followed them, stepping over the guy as he went. Memorizing his face for a moment. The second the muzzle was off, this was the person he was going after first. Tough flesh or not.

Turns out the cells in this place were equally inhumane, a giant shared room where everyone slept together in a huddle on the floor. Peter couldn't bring himself to care, he was feeling tired. More tired than he felt in a long time. The drug sapped away all of his energy just as it formed, while it simultaneously kept him from getting what made the energy in the first place. So Peter just plopped down and went to sleep.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!!!

Vol. 9

Chapter Notes

Longest chapter yet!!
-
I've decided to work on fixing the beginning of the book in the background, and post it one I've got it all done. Thanks for the feedback!!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

He woke up to the sound of muffled screaming. Not loud, nothing near loud enough to wake the entire sleeping pile. It was just a subtle sound echoing down the hall. He heard another the moment his eyes opened, and he jerked up.

It sounded like Gamora.

He shoved an arm off him and made to follow the sound. His head spun as he stood, dizzy and uncoordinated. Like when he'd been starved in the past, but no hunger came along with it, no wanting to tear into the nearest person. At the moment he was almost thankful for that, wanting to eat would be more distracting than not being able to is. But his normal strength would be nice right now. He shoved those thoughts from his mind and tried to focus on the task.

He made it to the room they had trapped her in, following the sounds of laughter and struggling. They were holding her against a wall. Two men holding her back by each arm, a whole room of people ready to tackle her if she managed to get away- a knife held to her throat. Peter thought for a second that this was entirely dishonorable of them. Fifteen versus one was unfair, but then he remembered who they were dealing with. Gamora probably could have taken them all out with just a scrap of cloth and a bit of determination. They must have grabbed her while she slept.

The knife inched closer to her neck. The big guy was getting ready for the killing blow, as he spouted some monologue that Peter couldn't bother to listen to. Peter felt the same churning anger in his gut, dampened under layers of drugs but fighting its way up. Like the little bubbles that form in a pot of water just before it starts boiling.

His body still felt loose and clumsy, but he tensed. Ready to strike out. In this situation, when all weapons were taken and he was battling a bigger guy, he'd usually use his teeth or his kagune. But that wasn't an option. He'd have to rely on his dampened strength. If he snapped the neck of the big guy while his back was turned he could take his knife and ward off the guys holding back Gamora. After that, she'd hopefully be able to defend the both of them and they could hide in another cell.

With the plan ready he took a single step forward, nearly into view of the group surrounding Gamera, and he felt a tug on his pant leg. He froze, sluggish mind trying to identify the threat as he looked down. It was the raccoon. Rocket.

In the moment he took to pause, Gamora shook off both the people holding her. Simultaneously stealing their knives and directing them at the two bigger threats. Half the onlookers in the room ran away. Peter relaxed. She had it handled, he could just watch from the shadows and make sure she got out safe and sound, then return to his cell. He was grateful Rocket had slowed him down. This way he wouldn't have to worry about making enemies with whatever gang ran this prison this way.

Then the big guy sprang forward, grabbing Gamora by the neck and pushing her against the wall. Gamora was good, but brute strength paired with rage was a hard thing to go up against, no matter how much training you had. Peter knew, he'd been that brute strength before.

He had her pinned, and Peter acted before his mind even processed that he had. One second Rocket was trying to hold him back, and the next he was in the room trying to talk him down. He was surprised, normally when his body acted on its own, it involved a lot of blood and fresh meat.

"Hey, hey, hey," He tried to think as he got the guy's attention, the remaining half of their audience looked at Peter and paled. Making their way out of the room as quickly as possible, "If you really want to kill Ronan, this isn't the way to go about it," Okay, that was a good start, but what next?

"Arn't you the creature this wench tried to kill?" He said, and Peter paused at that. He was right. Normally Peter wouldn't give a rat's ass about protecting someone (especially someone who tried to kill him) unless they were a Ravager, and even then he wouldn't go too far out of his way for it. The only people he had ever put his life on the line for were Yondu and Kraglin, the people who raised him and fed him consistently. He suspected his ghoul instincts had a part to play in that. Dampening his empathy for anything that he considered food, keeping him safe from pesky things like ‘getting too attached’ until they became more useful alive then as food. So why was he doing all this for her?

The drug. It had to be a side effect of that stupid drug. Maybe it didn’t dull just his abilities, but his mentality as well. Maybe he wanted to protect this strange group cause they were the first people he wasn’t constantly wondering subconsciously how best to sauté (not that Peter usually cooked his food, it was just a phrase he liked to use). Maybe he saw them as equals instead of a to-go bag, just as he saw Yondu and Kraglin? Them instantly ranking as ‘very important people’ because he could actually see them as people. If that was true, what would he think of them after the drug wore off?

He could think about that later, for now he had to deal with the knife.

“Maybe, but the whole galaxies after me, I don’t hold it against her,” Peter smirked, “Tons of people, cops and ladies alike, want a piece of me.”

“Hopefully you don’t take pieces back,” He heard Rocket mumble behind him, and he sent the vermin a glare. When he looked back to Drax, he seemed particularly angry. Peter back tracked.

“I see you don’t care. Okay… But get this, she betrayed Ronan. So she can bring you to him,” He nodded at Gamora, “And that’s when you,” He slid his finger against his own throat.

“Why would I put my finger against this throat?” Drax furrowed his brow.

“What?” Maybe the drug was just making his mind work to slowly to figure out the confusion… “Oh, no- it’s just a symbol. For you, cutting his throat.”

“I would not slice his throat, I would cut his head clean off,” Drax emphasized. Peter assumed in this situation he would usually feel annoyed. A little angry, there was even a chance those emotions would evolve into hunger. Usually, he had enough self-control to fight that off before it got far, but it was strange that he didn't even have to try. He only felt endearment, like he was watching a puppy get confused over a squeaker toy. It seemed the drug was doing wonders for his ability to garner first impressions of people when he wasn't distracted by hunger. Now everyone, not only the people he had been brought to jail with, seemed like equals and not an entree. That would probably be annoying later.

"I like how you think, the bloodier the better, am I right?" Peter chuckled awkwardly, still holding up his hands in a calming gesture, "So do you want to team up? Let my friend go, so she can lead us to Ronan?"

Drax held her for a moment longer, Peter getting ready to lunge for the knife, and then he let her go.

"I like your knife, I'm keeping it," He said to the man in the corner, then sauntered out of the room.

Chapter End Notes

Hey, I've been thinking and I decided 'might as well' so I'm gonna link my insta

@gracie_l.lee

My account doesn't really have anything to do with fics, it's just art (there might be some doodle you could recognize from my work, but not many haha). That might mislead you to think that this is just a shameless grab for followers and likes, and that's…… 100% accurate.

-

Thanks for reading!!!!

Vol. 10

Chapter Notes

Sorry this chapters kinda boring. It'll get more exciting soon!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

"Why did you save me?" Gamora said as she walked in front of them, heading back to her cell with not hesitation. Nothing about her body language saying she had just nearly been killed, "Are you, perhaps, the type of creature that likes to play with it's food first?" She didn't even look at him when she spoke, continuing walking and forcing Peter and Rocket to follow after her.

"Wha- no!" That wasn't his thing. He did his best to never cause unnecisarry stress on his victims, "I'm not planning on eating you! I even don't think I'd be able to scratch you!"

"Then why stop the big guy?" She stopped suddenly to turn and stare up at him. She had only fire and steal in her eyes, no fear or lingering terror.

"You know where to sell my orb," Peter said. If he went though all this -burned his bridges with the ravagers, allowed the Nova Corps to confirm the expectiveness of a drug on him, and go through whatever sort of hangover from hell it cause- be was going to get payed for it. If he didn't sell that orb he was going to… he didn't know, but it probably add a couple million to his bounty.

"I don't know if you know this, but you and it are still here," She glared at him, saying it like he was stupid, "Do you plan are chewing a hole through the wall?"

"No," He tried to chuckle, but he just wasn't in the mood for it, "But, my friend Rocket, here, has escaped 22 prisons," Peter sent a conspiratl smirk to Rocket.

"Oh, were getting out," Rocket said without hesitation, "And then were heading straight to Yondu to retreive your bounty." Rocket pointed a finger up at him. Peter felt the urge to bare his teeth, but held it back. Right now he was making friends, not starting wars.

“If you get me out of here,” Gamora looked down, some of the defensiveness leaving her posture, “I will lead you to the buyer, and we can split the prophets,” She sent a quick glance up to Quill, and he smiled.

The next morning Peter was feeling different. Some of the weakness in his limbs lessening, the distance between him and his ghoul strength growing shorter. The fog in his mind clearing. He smelt the air. It was still strangly unappitising, considering the cusine sorrounding him, but he was starting to be able to smell the food. Just yesterday it seemed like he couldn’t even smell anything, and now it was more like smelling somehting good after you just ate. Pleasing, but uninteresting.

He let out a long sigh of relief, the subtle fear of the drug being permantine leaving his mind. Though the fear was immediately replaced by the prossiblility of a guard coming in with a follow up shot.

He spent the one hour up to shower time fearing an attack, one that never came. Maybe they had expected it to last longer? Or maybe they where waiting for him to show signs of his strength returing? Either way, he kept his gaurd up, and tried to hide that he was starting to feel better.

He grabbed the tray of slop labeled’ ‘breakfast’ of the counter and followed the rest of his merry crew to a table. Sitting down across from Rocket with Gamora to his left and Groot to his right. He looked down to the mass of food on his plate, smashing it around with his spoon, and was relieved it didn’t look apitizing. At least the drug didn’t force him to eat this processed crap. He almost had to plug his nose when the smell of it wafted up to him.

He looked around at the others and watched them eat it, a familir disgust associated with watching non-ghouls eat pooling in him. Seeing it always bringing back memories of the times the ravagors dare him to eat regular food, it all resulting in his vomiting it back up. They, of course, always laugh merrily until he starts daring them to try his food.

“Feeling jealous, cannibal?” Rocket asked over his plate, the insult not even phasing Peter. He musted have seen him staring at the food.

“Feeling pity,” Peter said, allowing his face to show the disgust he was feeling. He brought a bit of slop up to his nose with the spoon and sniffed it qearily, then immediately dropped it back onto the plate, “Smells like tree bark, some by product from an animal I hope I never encounter, and just a bit of vanilla. I would say I can’t believe you’re not throwing up, but I guess your ancestors do life of actual garbage so…”

Rocket growled, and Peter smiled, though it was much more a display of teeth.

“I hear you have a plan of escape,” Gamora interrupted them. Rocket leaned back, and Peter withdrawled as well. They could banter once they where out of here.

“Yep,” Rocket said with a confident smirk, “I’m just gonna need a few things first.”

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please kudo and comment!!!

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!